

Hello,

I am now, and continue to be dismayed, at what the current relaxed ownership rules have done to the landscape of the radio and television business. There is MUCH less variety, a virtual sameness, that reflects just the tastes, opinions and pocketbooks of a very few.

The public airwaves need to reflect a greater diversity than they currently do. So relaxing them even further will do a great disservice to the general public, while lining the pockets of a very few large corporations.

Instead of relaxing the rules they should, in fact, be tightened to encourage more diversity.

respectfully submitted
Steve Chambers
